

Kimberly Bolig lives in Winfield with her husband, Jerry, four dogs and three cats. She currently works at Commonwealth University-Bloomsburg but has been in higher education for the past 37 years. While at CU Bloomsburg/Bloomsburg University, Kim has overseen the STEM Education Center which is how she became involved with the Bloomsburg Children's Museum. The partnership between these two has brought many hours of STEM experience to the Bloomsburg education students and Kim wants to see this flourish and expand in the future.

Kim has two bachelor's degrees (Business and German), a master's degree in educational counseling and a doctorate in high education administration. Fun facts about Kim is that she has a son, Nikolas, who was adopted from Bulgaria when he was two years old, she donated one of her kidneys to her brother, she loves to travel, and started playing pickleball before the pandemic when no one knew what it was. Kim is honored to be able to help the museum in any way she can and believes that our region is so fortunate to have such a gem here for children to enjoy.
